↳ Rise Up UK

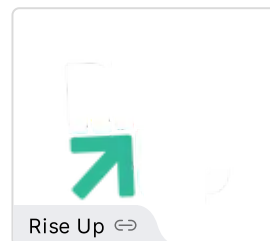

Across the UK, 923,000 young people are currently not in employment, education or training (NEET)* - That's approximately 1 in 8 young people.

While this marks a slight decrease from previous figures, the challenge is far from over. Many young people have now been out of work for over a year, and around 1 in 5 of them have no formal qualifications which is twice the rate seen across the wider youth population.

The problem

Unsurprisingly, young people are feeling increasingly disaffected and disconnected - only 1 in 3 believe employers are supportive of hiring them, and nearly half lack confidence they'll progress into a good job.

This issue causes long-term harm for young people and hurts us all. According to the Youth Employment Group, reducing the number of NEET young people to the same level as the Netherlands (4.4% vs 12.5%) could generate £69 billion in GDP and mean 500,000 more young people earning or learning.
